Bangladesh's total number of cholera cases in the same time period. An updated study by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), titled 'Food and nutrition analysis to support national nutrition surveillance and monitoring' (FNSM) has reported the number of water-borne disease cases in the division between 2000 and 2013 as a staggering 14.4 million. Unsurprisingly, Rangpur had the highest number of water-borne disease cases in the country in the past 13 years, a pattern seen for all the reported diseases. The study noted that the division had a high percentage of poor and marginalised people living in resource poor households. "The high occurrence of poor sanitation and the lack of safe drinking water in low-income families further exposed their health to a high risk of disease," the FAO said. Rangpur is home to 6.7 million people and yet the study found that in the division, almost 3.9 million (57 per cent) people suffer from chronic malnutrition. This is twice the national average of 23 per cent. "Poor household sanitation and water resources can lead to a poor diet and nutrient intake, and ultimately affect the health of people, especially children," said Debabrata Mahapatra, Director, FAO' a1d647c40b

For just as some people are ignorant and foolish, so the prophets were also. The knowledge and divine inspiration of the prophets was of no better sort than this; but to prophesy successfully it is necessary to put in practice what one has received. This they were unable to do, because the prophet was not able to feel himself to be a witness to the things about which he was predicting; and therefore it was that the things predicted proved false and remained without effect. But the prophets who speak in words of knowledge are able to judge of the things that happen in accordance with the Lord's will.Facebook's latest privacy scandal is bad enough on its own, but it's also likely to escalate into one of the worst privacy scandals in recent history. The latest problem, which broke on Wednesday, is that the social network's photo-matching feature — one of the most popular Facebook privacy features — may have mistakenly matched a photo of a minor with a photo of a celebrity. A Facebook spokesperson confirmed to Business Insider that some users were mistakenly alerted that a minor had published an "intimate image" of herself. Because a photo matched to an account that's verified to be under age 18 is automatically removed from Facebook, it's hard to tell if the mistake went far enough to allow minors to share such photos. But once Facebook learns from the mistake, that photo is expected to be removed and its owner's account is expected to be closed. When a photo is taken at a location that doesn't allow minors to be present, a notification appears on a user's profile and on the photo itself with the caption "We think this may be an intimate photo of a minor." But even though the photo is removed, the notification stays up on the profile for up to seven days. That means that a minor may think that their photo was removed when it was actually just hidden for a week. To complicate things further, Facebook has also now announced that its photo-matching feature is taking a page from a controversial dating app called Tinder and will give minors'
