The final goal is to ensure that all of your games are kept in sync and updated on all your devices. Even if you go to another device, the updates will happen without the user's having to do anything. According to the Android Application Developers blog: At Google I/O we announced that you'll be able to get a taste of the newest Game Services features in the near future. In the meantime, you can follow the developer blog to find out the new features as they're released. Game Services are those services that enable developers to create cross-platform games that allow users to play the game on any Android-powered device. Through these services, users can easily see what is happening in all of their games on any device they are on. I will provide more detailed information about the new features that have been added in the blog. In the case of Android, programming is done with Java. As Java programming has its problems, we need to change that. JavaFX is a toolkit that can be used to develop cross-platform, native applications and games. What this means is that your JavaFX application will work on Android devices as well as many other platforms. You will no longer need to think in Java. Your cross-platform application will develop with the same code in Java and with native code for the platforms you want to target. Take a look at what it takes to make a JavaFX application on Android: To make an application that runs on Android, you will need to take advantage of JavaFX features through libraries such as Android ART. To display a Toast message, the JavaFX toolkit must be used, or you will need to use a native platform for Android. JavaFX is not well suited for cross-platform games or applications. This toolkit is primarily used as a framework to build

It's been a long while since my last update. To be honest, I am not enjoying life because of the current situation, and it shows. (I know it's not funny, but humor is not my strong point) With that being said, I hope to make your lives easier by giving you a small update with a nice and fun game. Today we are going to talk about a puzzle game. I know that some of you don't like puzzle games, and I don't blame you. I used to enjoy some of them, and I did liked the concept of "combination lock" games, such as "Triplicate", but I didn't know this is what I was going to find today. I finally got it installed on my phone, and before getting it fully sorted out, I played it a bit to see how it works. The game is very simple: You have to solve 4 puzzle within time limit, and the more puzzles you solve, the more points you will get. You will be given certain amount of food that you can eat, but you will lose it during playing the game. You can play the game while sitting or walking, and it's quite fast paced too. You will feel like you are playing Triplicate, because it's the same concept. The goal is to solve the puzzles within time limit, and there will be harder and faster puzzles, which will put you to the limit. Be very careful with the time counts, because if you don't solve the puzzle
