Thanks to a help function this component is to be very user-friendly! Do not get too close to your keyboard! Keys are pressed until a new keystroke message is sent. The message is not sent unless the pressed key is "marked" in the keyboard by the user. The message is sent only one time, if the "marking" is removed. This component can be used in any window where keyboard messages are received. KEYMACRO Usage: * Bind keyboard messages to any key or button. * Create keyboard messages with a help function. * It is not necessary to have a mouse in the screen. For users of the Keys macro, a lot can be done with this component. For instance, you can bind a "Help" button to a specific key. This way, when the user presses "Help" the macro sends a new "Help" message. This can be used for any scenario you want. Keys may also be used with keystroke macros. An example for this would be if a user wants to be able to press a specific key combination to start a specific macro. You may then bind a keyboard message like: press key combination "a" to start macro "A" press key combination "b" to start macro "B" press key combination "c" to start macro "C" KEYMACRO Features: * Bind keyboard messages to any key or button. * Create keyboard messages with a help function. * It is not necessary to have a mouse in the screen.
