In a ruling that could change the direction of the gay-rights movement in the U.S., the state's highest court said the ban violated the state constitution's guarantee of equal protection. The court said that because California has shown no reason for its ban, the law is unconstitutional. "The only justifications for the traditional definition of marriage advanced by the Attorney General are not supported by the history of marriage, family, or the community," Chief Justice Ronald George wrote. "In light of this, the statutory limitation on marriage to a man and a woman is not substantially related to legitimate government interests." The California Supreme Court overturned a decision by a lower state court that ruled Proposition 8, which prohibited gay marriage in the state, violated the state constitution. The California Constitution says that marriage can only occur between a man and a woman. Gay rights advocates, who had their sights set on changing the U.S. Constitution, hailed the ruling as historic. "Marriage equality is finally a reality in the United States," said attorney Ian Thompson of the American Civil Liberties Union in a statement. "With the final nail in the coffin of Prop 8, this discriminatory ban on marriage for same-sex couples is dead, history is made, and families across California can breathe a sigh of relief." Gay marriage is legal in eight states and the District of Columbia. "The time has come for all state and federal lawmakers to come to the table and chart a new course for a country that is increasingly more diverse in its people, its culture, and its communities," said Chad Griffin, president of the Human Rights Campaign, an advocacy group that backed Proposition 3e33713323
