Mechanistic study of Ag⁺-ZnO nanocomposite in visible-light photo-degradation of phenol. The processes of formation, degradation and mineralization of phenol using Ag⁺-ZnO nanocomposite as a visible-light photocatalyst under simulated solar light irradiation have been studied. The intermediates formed during the photocatalysis were identified by using gas chromatography-mass spectrometry (GC-MS) as well as liquid chromatography-electrospray ionization mass spectrometry (LC-ESI-MS) techniques. It was found that the Ag⁺-ZnO nanocomposite photocatalyst can effectively degrade phenol in aquatic solution. The complete mineralization of phenol is observed when the photocatalyst is irradiated with visible-light ($\lambda > 400$ nm). The analysis of the intermediates formed during the photocatalytic reaction has been carried out by GC-MS and LC-ESI-MS studies. The intermediates formed during the photocatalysis of phenol are identified as nitrite, chlorate, nitrobenzene and CO₂.

Spectroscopic studies of the effects of nivalenol (NIV) on soybean (Glycine max [L.] Merr.) seed germination. Nivalenol (NIV), a type B trichothecene, is a potent mycotoxin produced by some Fusarium and Gibberella species. Here, the effect of NIV on soybean germination is investigated, using spectroscopy. Changes in chlorophyll fluorescence parameters, high-resolution transient absorption spectroscopy and electron paramagnetic resonance (EPR) spectroscopy were used to determine the toxicity, cellular damage, oxidative stress and the levels of active oxygen species. The results obtained showed that NIV caused damage to the plastoglob
