This invention relates generally to amusement park rides and, more particularly, to an apparatus and method for playing a game of chance utilizing one or more prize pinballs on a conventional pinball game table. Amusement parks have long sought new ways of entertaining their patrons. More specifically, amusement parks are constantly seeking new ways of providing their patrons with new and exciting rides. A new line of rides directed to older patrons is always desirable. One of the attractions in the park is the pinball game. People from all over the world enjoy the challenge and excitement of the game of pinball. Some recent efforts to improve the game have included adding lights and sound to pinball games. Other efforts have simply provided new types of game settings and new materials to make the game more fun. In this regard, some types of game play have been changed to provide more of a competition between players. However, the game itself has largely remained the same. The result is that pinball remains one of the major game attractions in the amusement park. There are a number of games which can be played on a pinball machine which are directed to various types of contests. For example, in the game of golf, it is known to allow the player to play against the computerized scoring and computerized player. In addition, pinball games have been devised which allow one player to play against another. However, these games are limited to the competition between two players. It is, therefore, desirable to provide a new type of game which is directed toward the game of pinball. It is also desirable to provide a game which will appeal to a large number of patrons. It is an object of the present invention to provide a new game of chance for a pinball
