+ The development was made only by two persons + Editing, Artwork & Graphics + Configurable controls that allow the user to play the game in their own way + Statistic screens + Music + Video & High-resolution textures + Screens with an original composition of the story "Wira & Taksa" is a first person action 2D platform game made by Two Persons, whose protagonists are the warriors Wira and Taksa. You can access the game in three ways: 1 - Configurable controls that allow the user to play the game in their own way. 2 - Unlock a level (or a set of levels) when you complete the whole game. 3 - Start from the beginning of the game to follow the story of Wira & Taksa. In our game, players have a choice to control two different characters, each possessing advantages and disadvantages. Wira: A strong fighter and often the fastest in the group, but he has a strength limit of only 2 hits with his weapon. Taksa: The fastest in the group, but he is limited to only a speed of 12 blocks in any direction, and he is vulnerable to traps and to a powerful weapon. Play it your way! Main features: + Dual control (Wira & Taksa): Take advantage of the different characteristics of each of the characters to defeat the level or get out of the narrow passages. + Two game modes: Campaign & Arcade + Six game levels divided into three campaigns; the first one with 4 levels, the second with 2 levels and the last with 2 levels. + Directories that allow the user to get access to a series of levels or campaign for each of the possible combinations of the characters Wira and Taksa. + Unlockable levels (or set of levels) that can be unlocked when the whole game is completed + High-quality graphics (except the "Taksa" chapter) + Original musical score composed exclusively for the game + Two exclusive sound effects (naming "Wira's Charon" & "Taksa's Ing", to activate when the sound effect is activated by the use of Wira and Taksa, respectively) A novel, highly focused beam with a super-Gaussian profile in high-power laser shock interaction. Try to go undetected. Take evasive actions to avoid detection. Small targets are easier to see and avoid. Maintain stealth to evade detection by enemy guards, cameras, motion detectors and other security devices. Destroy cameras and other sensors. MicroSpy is a simple game - there's no inventory or checkpoint system. Everything you need is right in front of you. MicroSpy is your fault. You're an enemy spy. You're on a mission and you're currently trespassing. In addition to the enemies, you're being detected by a bunch of security cameras. They're going to shoot you if they get the chance. They're all going to blame you. The Data storage center is wide open. There's nothing you can do about it. You're screwed. Suddenly, you notice you're under attack by a bunch of angry gorilla goons. To add to the problem, you've got a C4 that's about to go off. How are you going to prevent them from killing you, you think? Quickly improvise an escape. You're an agent. Agents like to improvise and think fast. However, the gorillas are very fast as well. Jump away, or delay the C4 so it doesn't go off. Take cover when possible. Use it. Your goal is to infiltrate enemy facilities and steal some of the most important data. Instructions: To play MicroSpy you need a mouse. You need to move the mouse to manipulate the camera. The first level is only 5 minutes. You start out in a small room, and then you go to a huge big room with 4 bosses. There's lots of going between rooms to get data, and going to the roof to hack into systems. You will need to make sure not to get detected. You can't save this game, but there's a brief pause to load a save state between levels. The game is short, but there's a lot of stuff going on. There's no inventory, no checkpoints. ReviewsSeems fair, but after playing the game, we can't see it. Probably should have read the small text above it a bit more carefully. Downloaded it but the file isn't very large.Probably because it's a modified copy of the game.Download file August 2, 2014 I looked all over the web, I went to different stores and even other review sites. women loved him in turn, because his cigarette gracefully finger-kissed them, and because he had the air of a young god who would not strike at those who had no sin, who did not deserve his power of detection. "Was it he who slew you?" Toni whispered when he found her sitting up in bed, and trembling still from the shock of what had happened. "I know not," faltered Frau Therbich from the pillow. "That wonderful hand that might have saved me." "Couldn't he have overlooked you? Or did he think that your age would have compromised your innocence?" Frau Therbich declared that that had not been beneath her holy missionary's nature. "It is the Prussian," cried Elisabeth to both. Toni turned to Gereon Freund. "Ah, Gereon," she murmured, "we thought that we had exorcised you! What devils! now, when we thought that in your secret life you should have found the brides of your youth, you appear to us as a ghostly avenger." The startled husband tried to defend himself. Elisabeth withdrew under thermometer and crucifix, and the two women followed her, and asked the foreign merchant's help. He gave them all his services; and that day and the days that followed, it seemed to Elisabeth, that life was restored to the sad house. At Schaffhausen the fugitives suddenly found a friend in Mr. Bousselt who married the excellent Frau Hermine Brunner to whom he had been introduced by Elisabeth. Frau Hermine was the sister of the burgomaster of Fribourg, and she had been in Switzerland a year before her sister's marriage. Therbich had taken her to Zuerich and had there enjoyed an interview with Max Bern, who is said to have fallen in love with her. He is also said to have got her the appointment of Superintendent of the Zurich Hospital, where she has remained since. Elisabeth for her part heard more of Max Bern. Of the good-looking Minister of the Interior he made a great show. All the men admired him at Zurich, except Werner Nachtstrom
