Windows 7 Ultimate Repair Install or..I have a bit of a "thing" for minimalist posters. I love the Zen posters of the 1960s, and, more recently, Bill Cunningham's classic posters from the early 1980s. My favorite is probably Monet, seen here on the poster for the 1964 Venice Biennale exhibition. I wonder, however, if Paul Thek's posters (discussed below) would fall into the same category? I love this one, Do Not Drive By, which was advertised as having "the title written in French on one side, and the title in English on the other, but the title is the same on both sides." I also love the poster for the 1965 Venice Biennale, shown below. I think I could live without the name of the exhibition, but I love the aesthetic of the poster. This is another favorite from 1966. I wonder if these were originally designed for a particular show, or if they were meant to be used as posters in general. I'd be interested to know what the tagline on the poster was. Another of Cunningham's classic posters (and one that has been mentioned here before, on a poster of the 1963 British poster show). One of my favorite posters of all time, by Anselm
