As a developer of good quality apps, I'm aware that if the user does not trust, or know who the person who made the icon is, and the fact that this may be software from a third party, it makes them wary of installing the app. So it's unfortunate that you haven't included the icons in your package. It would be great if you did include the icons in the package as we are happy to add your sdk in order to show your icons. Regards, John Lea Safafirbuzz icon is very smooth and beautiful. Like most of the other ones I tried. I would change the terms to something easier to understand (a "searchable" PDF). Thanks for sharing and you're very welcome The icon is big, the icons is small and the text is too big. Very helpful. Thanks for making this app. Works well and looks great. Would make it look better if the wording was a bit different, and smaller. Look Fantastic? A very good icon pack. Would like to see some controls on the icons like normal program icons. Icons to be moved on the launchpad, delete icon for main folder, back icon, open settings menu and more. Perhaps with wider colour choices. This is a good addition to the app. Very good quality. Good Adenosine receptors in human medullary carcinoma of the thyroid. Although it has been known for a long time that adenosine produces in all tissues a complex mixture of responses including respiratory depression, vasodilation and inhibition of cell proliferation, it was not until recently that adenosine receptors were described, and then only in the periphery and in the nervous system. It is now known that adenosine receptors are expressed in many human and animal tissues, as well as in human tumours. We have previously demonstrated that adenosine receptor activity is present in human thyroid tissue and that adenosine is released by follicular cells. However, adenosine receptor agonists and antagonists do not have cross-reactivity with thyroid tissue. In the present report we have investigated the expression of adenosine receptors in human medullary thyroid carcinoma (MTC). In MTC tissue sections a reduction in the number of binding sites was detected for (R)-N<sup>6</sup>-[phenylisopropyl]adenosine (R-PIA), 5'-N-ethylcarboxamidoadenosine (NECA) and 2-chloro-5'-N-ethyl-adenosine (CHA). The potency of CHA was low, which could be explained by the lack of this nucleoside in the tumour (no expression of adenosine deaminase or equilibrative nucleoside transporter) compared to the adjacent thyroid. NECA displayed reduced affinity in the tumour. (R)-PIA showed the lowest sensitivity, the highest affinity and also the lowest affinity in the normal thyroid, indicating that some or all of the adenosine receptors in MTC are cross-reacting with the agonists used. The affinity of 2-chloro-8-phenyltheophylline (CPT), a potent adenosine receptor antagonist, was lower in MTC. The results suggest that adenosine receptors are present in MTC. In the tumour, this system is no longer active and/or affects only the amount of available receptors.
