Despite the major accomplishments in cancer therapy of the last decade, chemotherapy has remained largely unchanged since the introduction of the first antineoplastic agents over 60 years ago. One example is the question of combination chemotherapy and dose intensification. The rationale for such an effort is to deliver more dose per unit time for the tumor, whereas limiting the dose and toxicity of drugs to normal tissues. A study by E. C. Petersen et al. in Blood submitted a report that 5-fluorouracil (5FU)-based combination chemotherapy had been used successfully in small-cell lung cancer and in gastrointestinal cancer and at a high dose intensity. These results suggest that a major thrust of cancer chemotherapy in the future may be the increased use of this highly active drug in combination. The mechanism of action of 5-fluorouracil is the inhibition of
