However, when I run X11 server, installed from source, my config file isn't used. It's using the default config file, which is located in /etc/X11/xorg.conf. I have created my own configuration file, so how can I use it? I have included the X11-common package, which should provide the x.conf file, but it doesn't seem to be used. A: X11-common includes /etc/X11/xorg.conf, but only if the file exists and has not been modified. I suspect that your sources have been configured to not generate an X11/xorg.conf file. It's difficult to help you determine this without more details about how you are building X11-common or how you have configured your source repositories.
