Her brother, who was 37 when the study was conducted, died a few years later, leaving the pair to make up the ages of the remainder of their joint lifetime. 'This is just amazing,' said Mildred H. Danzer, an anthropologist at the University of Hawaii at Manoa and an author of the study. 'It's the best news I've heard in my career.' A pair of identical twins has been shown for the first time in a medical study to have similar lifespans. Diana and Daniel Blake survived on average almost 70 years with each other Mildred H. Danzer, an anthropologist at the University of Hawaii at Manoa, and an author of the study, said: 'This is just amazing. It's the best news I've heard in my career' Ms Danzer and her colleagues have been examining the lives of 1,512 sets of twins born in the U.S. in the 19th and 20th centuries to see how long they survived together. The researchers said the results could help shed light on the role of genetics and health care in increasing a person's lifespan. The researchers identified couples who had the highest survival rate after their twins were born. They then calculated the average age of the siblings, dividing their combined lives by two. In one case, the pair of siblings was born in 1895. The boy was a year younger than the girl and they were born in Philadelphia. As a result of two major childhood diseases - whooping cough and scarlet fever - the boy died at age 19, but the girl survived until she was 103

In wireless communications systems (e.g., 5th Generation (5G)), dense deployment can be used to enable new types of mobile services (e.g., machine type communications (MTC) or pervasive or smart home or commercial automation). Typically, to meet such dense deployment goal, it can be beneficial to make a small-sized base station (BS) a remote BS that is co-located with the user equipment (UE). The remote BS is referred to as a UE remote BS or a UE rel BS. For example, a remote BS can cover a range of typically tens of meters or less, such as

10 meters or less. A UE rel BS may have limitations on deployment. For example, a UE rel BS can be difficult to deploy because wireless communications and energy consumption of the UE rel BS may be high. Further, for example, when there are many terminals (e.g., UEs) that are close to a remote BS in terms of range, UE rel BSs may be expected to increase the number of simultaneous connections. Thus, in many cases, UE rel BSs can be a cost-effective and scalable solution for the dense deployment in 5G wireless communications systems. Existing communication devices (e.g., UE rel
