Grizzland is a platformer about fighting Dinos and exploring the land. It creates numerous possibilities in a limited environment. A resolution of 128x96 pixels and merely 5 colours are the heart and soul of this planet! In Grizzland, you will find: A true open-world setting. The areas you unlock are yours forever. Feel free to walk from one to another without facing any loading screens! Old-school Quests with no pointers. Remember, when you actually had to read quests and use your brain to understand what to do? When quests had a meaning for the game world and its inhabitants? Welcome back! An opportunity for genuine Exploration. Many places on Grizzland are completely optional. If you are up for a journey, the darkest corners are waiting for you! Secret areas. The secrets in Grizzland are not there just to give you an achievement. They immerse you into the game's world and tell you the story about its creation. Various Skills, Items and Passive abilities. The Items you obtain are vital for your progress in this Universe. They are so important that you can't even jump without one of them! Unique opponents and epic battles. You will remember the "Dog" for a long time, guaranteed. A real human being behind the screen. Hi! I am Khud0, and I made this game. I am always open for your ideas and ready to fix the bugs! Are you still reading this? In that case, you and Grizzland are a perfect match! See you in the game! About The Game Grizzland: Grizzland is a platformer about fighting Dinos and exploring the land. -180629]. This boost has indeed been used for the specific case of the  $\alpha_{\mathrm{s}}$ -correction and for the  $\mathbf{O}(\alpha_s^2)$  corrections to heavy quark production, and used extensively over the years in the CalcHEP library. Such a boost has recently been used by Sabacalc to calculate the  $\mathbf{O}(\alpha_s)$  corrections to Drell-Yan production in dimensional regularization [Boupeanu\_2018]. Note that the corresponding transformation between longitudinal variables in

SIDDAS and  $e^+e^-$  final state observables would be different. As already mentioned, in this paper we focus on the case of  $W$  production at the LHC only. Even though the theory of Drell-Yan production being a subsample of DIS at large  $Q^2$  and small  $x$ , inclusive kinematics can nevertheless be used as a tool to test the numerical results for jet observables as well. To compute the jet rate and the jet mass in DIS we will follow the same strategy. Jet observables in DIS {#sec:DIS} =====

The DIS structure function  $F_2$  {#subsec:F2}
 ----- In hadronic collisions the final state consists of colliding hadrons (as e.g. protons and neutrons) which may go through a complicated sequence of hard scatterings, modifying their momentum and energy spectrum. The distribution of the energy, momentum and light-cone momentum components of the final state is known with much higher precision than the physical cross section. This description of the final state is in accordance with the Factorization Theorem, which states that any inclusive cross section can be factorized into two factors: a hard factor describing the short distance interactions, and a function (parton distribution) describing the long distance properties of the hadron.

Since the early 1990s the factorization formalism for DIS has been successfully applied to hadron-hadron collisions. Consider for instance the production of a color singlet quark-antiquark pair ( $q\bar{q}$ ) in DIS. The hard-scattering factorization applies if both jet and threshold corrections can be neglected, i.e. kinematical cuts on the
