AVAILABLE ON PC (WebAssembly version) and GOG.COM. A high-quality low-cost microfilter for filtration and concentration of biological samples. The aim of the paper is to evaluate the filtration and concentration capabilities of the TFF-2BIOPHARM microfilter, compared with those of Sterlitech Multiscreen system of filtration, for on-site-screening purposes, that is, filtration of biological samples to concentrate the target analytes and/or for the detection of a target analyte. The study evaluates the TFF-2BIOPHARM from two points of view. Firstly, filtration of 50 microL of different dilutions of whole blood (at concentrations of 10%, 20% and 30% for EDTA and heparin) and detection of antibodies to kupfer cells in whole blood. Secondly, filtration of 25 microL of whole blood to concentrate Kupffer cells (10, 20 and 30% for EDTA and heparin). The performances obtained show that the filtration and concentration capabilities of the TFF-2BIOPHARM are comparable to those of Sterlitech Multiscreen system when 10% dilutions of whole blood are screened, with a recovery of approximately 85% of the target analyte. When an additional 20% dilution is screened, the TFF-2BIOPHARM performs better, with a total recovery of approximately 95% of the target analyte. For whole blood, the recovery obtained is lower, at approximately 50%. The TFF-2BIOPHARM outperforms Sterlitech system for whole blood, with a recovery of approximately 75% of the target analyte.

MotoGP (video game) MotoGP is a motorcycle racing game released for Game Boy in Japan in 1996, on the Game Boy Advance in 2004. The game is set in the same racing world as MotoGP 2, released for the Game Boy in 1998. The game was released in Europe by Acclaim on 29 October 1998, but was never released in North America. The game features two game modes. The first is time attack, where the player races against the clock. The second game is freestyle, which is just like freestyle mode in MotoGP 2.
