Thus all the baryonic matter in the universe is made of “masses” of ζ_L of spin 1/2 and $\zeta_{R\mu}$ of spin 3/2, which are essentially just emergent fields, as discussed in Sec. [sec:npvt]. It would be interesting to see if there is a generalized theory that can generalize this to arbitrary spin. As always, in nature, it turns out the smallest dimension α is the coupling constant in string theory, but we have argued that one does not have to take α to be the smallest dimension to have emergent gravity. [22]: [foot]Note that with $\alpha=1$ there is one more arbitrary parameter in the theory. One can show that that there is only one possible choice of γ so that no elementary fermions are produced in the process: $\gamma=1$. The two fermion fields $\Psi_{\vec{x}}$ can be seen to transform with $\gamma=1$ as components of a 4-vector under Lorentz transformations, since the action ([action]) is invariant under local Lorentz transformations. [23]: [fock]Here, one is not worried about composite fermions of ψ . [24]: [footn]For any tensor $T_{a_1\dots a_n}$, we define a symmetric traceless tensor $\tilde{T}_{e79caf774b}$
