Queensland's new premier, Annastacia Palaszczuk, has declared the state will continue to privatise schools, despite the recently passed federal education omnibus bill abolishing all school funding by 2023. In announcing the state government's education policy, the premier said the process would begin with the $700m sale of the Cooper school-group to the Mater Hospital group. "The Cooper group will provide a legacy of excellence for our state, with the Mater hospital leading the way with world-class cancer treatments and research," Palaszczuk said. "With the Andrews government selling Cooper, we are ensuring all the state's schools remain with the public sector." Palaszczuk said the QTU was also selling three other state education groups - Gracemere primary, Gympie primary and Gympie state college. "It's a sad day that the education state has to sell its assets," said Palaszczuk, who was sworn in as Queensland's 27th premier on Monday. "We're a state of hope, so these sales are part aa67ecbc25
