Spanish: ¡Soy un científico! Y justo ahora, mucha gente se pregunta cuál es tu estilo favorito en la fama y la riqueza: ¿será una mujer, será un hombre? No te preocupes: ¡ya lo tengo! Ya sabes, ¡es mucho más fácil para mí hacerlo! ¡Realmente lo disfruto, es increíble! Esta es una de mis últimas imágenes hechas en España antes de irme. Es muy increíble... Llevo meses haciendo la tercera parte de esto y también no le puedo decir cuánto disfruto de hacer la parte superior porque al final, todo lo que hago es una imagen de sucedáneo. ¡Y está bien! ¡Soy un científico! Y justo ahora, mucha gente se pregunta cuál es tu estilo favorito en la fama y la riqueza: ¿será una mujer, será un hombre? English: I am a scientist And right now, a lot of people are asking you Which one is your favorite style in fame and wealth? It's a women, it's a men. Don't worry I have the answer You know, it's much easier to do for me! I really enjoy it, it's amazing! This is one of my last pictures made in Spain before going away. I really enjoy it, it's incredible! I've been doing this part for months And I am not the sort of person who can tell you how much I enjoy doing the top, Because in the end, all that I do is a fake picture. And it's okay! I am a scientist And right now, a lot of people are asking you Which one is your favorite style in fame and wealth? It's a women, it's a men. Don't worry I have the answer Spanish: No t

What's New In?

The use of ethene/propene alkyl carbamates as vulcanizing agents and polymer additives is well known. Ethene/propene alkyl carbamates, at low concentrations, are active vulcanizing agents to increase the modulus at room temperature and at elevated temperatures and are effective chain extenders for ethylene polymers to increase the intrinsic viscosity of the resultant ethylene polymers. The low concentrations of the alkyl carbamates in the polymer are needed to obtain the beneficial effects on the end use physical properties. The polymer systems with the low concentrations of the alkyl carbamates and, therefore, the low concentration of the vulcanizing agents have not found wide acceptance in the commercial market. Ethene/propene alkyl carbamates are known to be effective polymer modifying agents in, for example, improving the flexural modulus of virgin and degraded EPDM, improving the resistance to fuel embrittlement of virgin and degraded EPDM, and improving the resistance to flammability of virgin and degraded EPDM. Typically the ethene/propene alkyl carbamates are present at a concentration greater than 1.0 weight percent. The ethene/propene alkyl carbamates typically are present at about 0.5 to 20 weight percent. The ethene/propene alkyl carbamates typically are present at about 1.5 to 6 weight percent. In the ethene/propene alkyl carbamates presently available, a range of molecular weights are generally produced by the utilization of a methanol and a base as a solvent. The presence of alkyl hydroxyl groups in the molecule of the polypropylene additiive is utilized to stabilize the formaldehyde in the alkyl carbamate. U.S. Pat. No. 4,105,702 describes a process for the preparation of a modified EPDM polymer using an ethylene alkyl carbamate having the following formula: ##STR1## wherein R is selected from the group consisting of H and alkyl of 1 to 6 carbon atoms, R' is selected from the group consisting of H, R and C.sub.1 to C.sub.4 alkyl; A is O, S or CH.sub.2 ; PA1 X is H or CH.sub.3 ; PA1 a and b are the same or different and are
