We're a new indie game development team located in Chile, looking to create unique and entertaining games. Our first project is this physics based, arcade-style game. About Game Dependence: We use Unity 2D for our graphics and we are using this great backend developed in C# : We don't use 3D models, no particles, no animations, no fancy textures, just simple and efficient sprites and world created with the Unity editor. We are using Unity's component library to allow an easy integration with Lua scripts, which makes programming and managing the game fun. We use the popular C# language to create the scripts, but the system makes it accessible to programmers of all levels. About Me: Mario Casales, our CEO, is a very talented and experienced programmer who has recently found out the actual secrets of video game programming. We are now looking for people who have the same ambition and are ready to develop a solid team. I hope you will find this awesome game interesting, and maybe even try it out! p.s.We still need another team member to program the Lua scripts. If you're reading this, go to our Discord server! (About U/I: U/I is a new generation of game automation and analytics platform that aims to help developers analyze and get insights from their software products. This includes all kind of mobile, desktop, and server applications, not just games. Gamification is a tried and tested way to engage players in a constructive way. U/I provides a complete end-to-end solution that includes gamification, analytics, and communication.Universities share deadly coronavirus crisis By Oye Coker BBC News, Abuja Published duration 22 March Related Topics Coronavirus pandemic image copyright Reuters image caption Many Nigerian universities are now closed for the rest of the academic year Nigeria's universities have been badly hit by a coronavirus pandemic and are in dire need of funds to help them cope. I develop a sports game and I entered into the Steam Greenlight section, and its 6hrs and I haven't heard anything from store... Can somebody give me a tip on what I should do? Steve Wrote:When you make a product on Indie mega game platform and you have 100.000+ votes without anything but a contest on it,something is clearly wrong on your end Read on how Steam found this problem and put me on a permanent ban. "BrickFest started as a hobby side project a few months ago, completely independently of something like Valve's Steamworks portal. In fact, the only involvement I ever had with Steamworks ever was this submission: Back when Steamworks adoption first started to gain steam, I put myself up for a May Day Weekend contest as part of the Steamworks submission, and I won. That was exactly a year ago. So I started BrickFest as a side project to do the same thing, just with new tracks and new trains. It was a crazy idea, when Steamworks adoption was barely above 0 at all, let alone even at the brink of its... let's say "elevated scale of adoption" haha. I started to send out emails out to Steam and YouTube (back then), and I was lucky to find a few really supportive people that checked out the game:

Brickfest is a brick game where you can toss balls at bricks with the goal of breaking bricks. Grab bricks and drop them. Dodge other balls and manipulate them before they hit your walls. The game is casual and easy to pick up, but hard to put down. The game includes free content updates that introduce new gameplay mechanics, game modes, level designs, and features. Ultimate Basketball is a nice game, but with so many basketballers, and the game going by, it is not a really updated one. There are 3 kinds of abilities: Skill shot, jump ball, pass shot. I like the animations of skill shots but as a basketball player who plays 24/7 I don't need to make a cut and paste move which in some situations is a really bad decision in the passing game. So I can't use my pass shot or jump ball sometimes. It's annoying when they randomly appear. Also with some of the gameplay mechanics there isn't really much chance to earn any money. For example, if the ball is one of the worst in the game, if you shoot, it will give one ball and a drop. If you throw it, it's a drop. There isn't any double points. If you manage to score 3 points in a row, it's a nice chance to sell some bags but when the number of points goes above 3, it won't let you anymore. It also doesn't let you use the ball that you've dropped to increase your score points. Also, the only kind of ball that gives you money is the free ball. I know that you can get money with some of the levels you can unlock but it's not that much, and usually you don't get that ball with the level, but sometimes, it happens. I think you could improve the design and in the end, make it a great basketball game, with the possibility to earn money at any time of the game and not only when you unlock the levels. Best Basketball Game! 10/10. Very easy to play and challenging. Hoping that there will be some unlockables and features in the future and with the title! Thanks! *UPDATE: The new update (1.5) has not only added game modes and events, the menu screen now lists the time. It also has the option to turn on or off the sound and the loading screen. The multiple ball mode now automatically gets a ball instead of triggering a drop. You can also sell your own items by double clicking on an item. The extra stats now gives the overall highest score point of the game. It's possible to get a triple double with the score stat. Some features have been improved as well. They are also now sharing it with the users who have donated to the game. Users can now tell others about the game, and donate more to

What's new in Brickfest:

2014: A Cold Roast in St. Louis The event starts up on the PGSB homepage to give you some background information on the event. As I'm rather new to not only Worldbuilders, but the toastmasters, I'm very enthusiastic about a group from the wonderful world of tabletop role-playing. While I did enjoy seeing some Worldbuilders work, St. Louis is a bit of a two-hour drive for me, so I'm hoping to munch down on some sandwiches and so many games. Mark Gonzales is the group's starter, and this is his talk to you: St. Louis Toastmasters meet in at the Center for Arts, Science and Technology (CAST) in St. Louis. It's a pretty cool building, and makes me quite jealous. They have wonderful food, coffee, tea, and beer, and all of the things you expect at a meeting like this. But I'm a little biased, since I frequent this building on a regular basis. I'm also obligated to mention that this is not a sponsored event by my employer, B/X Entertainment, and should be considered a personal opinion. If you're not so familiar with Toastmasters, allow me to summarize it as a program to help others in leadership positions develop social skills and self-confidence. I would encourage anyone interested to help grow this amazing program. Toastmasters is an organization that aims to promote interpersonal communication and leadership through public speaking, reading, business meetings, and games (Toastmasters.org). There are roughly 350,000 members now, and over 65,000 in the Mid-Missouri area. They are expected to address a problem, provide a solution, and then improve and maintain the efficacy of their problem/solution with various methods and activities. They also hold several regional and local meets up, like Tournament of Champions, which I've also seen featured on the Car Trek game sessions. Recently, a session was held at Hildebrand Army Airfield in St. Joseph, Missouri, as the meet-up was slated to give military members (and civilians) a chance to play board games and talk. Today is going to focus on something called "Ice Breaker". To summarize, each group begins by talking about subjects that the participants don't agree with or understand, because it's not something that has happened to them. It's a common way to learn and gain confidence in situations such as a proposal or a job interview, among others. Its been proven that

System Requirements For Brickfest:

Input Devices Description: Most of the controls are done via the gamepad, and the gamepad settings can be adjusted if you wish. It uses the BizHawk Gamepad I mentioned in the last installment, so it's a little more complex than the basic "one button to do everything" design, but the controls still work. Keyboard and mouse support is also included. Keyboard/Mouse Play Store Description: Controls and gameplay are done with an included gamepad, so keyboard/mouse controls are also supported
