A management RPG with deep combat mechanics and a history-based, story-driven campaign. Battles take place on procedurally generated medieval maps, with new enemies, treasure, events, and monsters being added to the game every time you play. Be it your first day in the Cursed Lands or in a year long campaign, the world changes around you as you level up your character and fight for the survival of your village. The Music: The music of Dawn of the Dread is mainly inspired by the synthesizers of the 80's, along with a few psychedelic tunes. The Artwork: The artwork is inspired by the work of Flemish artists like Pieter Bruegel the Elder and Hieronymus Bosch, along with the Polish master of the grotesque, Maciej Makowski. The Mechanics: Most of the mechanics are inspired by the roguelike genre, with a deep battle system, lots of customizability and a vibrant procedurally generated world. The combat system is based around 'attacks' - both weak and lethal - and 'skills' - focused around either a single attack or a group of three. The player has also 2 out of four skills at all times, with the others being learned at a certain level. Each class has it's own set of skills, and of course, different weapons can be used in different situations, and even 'Attacks' can be customized by the player. The Vibe: Dawn of the Dread is probably the most ambient game currently available. It's easy and quick to play, but also very deep and satisfying with its multitude of features. A History-driven game, where your actions and choices will affect the game universe and story.
