I am using d3.js to construct an interactive web app. The basic idea is that the user clicks on an area of the canvas to define an area of the diagram, and the app constructs and draws different types of charts on top of that area in real time. I am trying to create a separate layer for each chart type. However, I don't know how to create a new node in the d3.js graph. Here is what I have so far: var t = d3.layout.tree().size([360, 360]).children(function(d) { return d.children; }).value(function(d) { return d.size; }); var w = 400, h = 300; var svg = d3.select("body").append("svg").attr("width", w).attr("height", h); svg.attr("width", w).attr("height", h).append("g").attr("transform", "translate(0,0)"); svg.append("clipPath").attr("id", "clip").append("rect").attr("x", 0).attr("y", 0).attr("width", w).attr("height", h); I tried appending a new group element to the svg, but I'm not sure how to append, say, a circle in that

Here is Javascript Code. `$(document).ready(function(){ var overlay = document.getElementById("Overlay"); overlay.style.display = "block"; overlay.style.opacity = "1"; setTimeout(function(){ overlay.style.opacity = "0"; }, 3000); });` A: The issue is you need to include jQuery in your script tags. This is the last in a series of daily posts documenting my experience as I travel from Detroit back to Manhattan and then on to Washington, D.C. DAY 24: I'm in Washington, D.C. As the smoke from my first major smoke in several days drifts up from the parking lot into the morning sky, two choices present themselves to me as I go about my day. One is to get an eye exam.
