I want to add a bandgap object in an ARKit scene. How to do this? Example image A: You can easily do this with SceneKit. A band gap object is simply a Geometry/Mesh object, and you can add them to a scene. To add a band gap object with SceneKit: var width = 1 // If you want the band gap to be very wide var height = 1 // If you want it to be very tall // Create a SCNGeometry object var geometry = SCNGeometry() var bandWidth = SCNVector3(width, height, width) // x, y, z geometry.firstMaterial.isDoubleSided = true geometry.firstMaterial.doubleSided = true geometry.firstMaterial.diffuse.contents = UIColor.red // The color of the band gap // Create the band gap mesh var mesh = SCNMesh() var vertices = SCNGeometryElement var triangleIndices = [UInt aa67ecb25

By dH2O, hydro office is a complete solution that provides a wide range of software tools, customizable interfaces, and accurate data to develop dynamic, interactive applications. It is a software package that supports you in four major areas of hydrology and hydrogeology. The following modules are included in the package: Topographic Modules Topographic Modules (previously named Topograp) contains different tools for stream network mapping, stream plane, and major channel geometry. Flow Directional Modules Flow Directional Modules (previously named FlowDirect) includes tools for directional modeling, floor-flow analysis, floodplain analysis, baseflow and inundation modeling, and different hydrogeological variables. Hydrological Modules Hydrological Modules (previously named Hydrolo) includes tools for modeling floodplains, calculating streamflow, and quantifying water sources and sinks. Oil and Gas Modules Oil and Gas Modules (previously named OilGas) includes tools for modeling oil and gas well trajectories, calculating wellhead pressure, flow and phase, and calculating reservoir characteristics. Flow Calculator Flow Calculator Landscapes (previously named Landscape) contains different tools to analyze and calculate the landscape of a project or a territory.
