The steady-state intracellular distribution of gamma-aminobutyric acidA (GABAA) receptor agonist binding sites in myelinated and demyelinated nerve fibres has been determined. 2. In both myelinated and demyelinated nerve fibres, a high density of binding sites was found in the periaxonal cytoplasm of axons and at the nodes of Ranvier. A low density of binding sites was observed in the axoplasm. 3. The density of binding sites in the different locations was not significantly different between myelinated and demyelinated nerve fibres. 4. It is concluded that, in a myelinated nerve fibre, the GABAA receptor is not uniformly distributed throughout the axon. 5. In demyelinated nerve fibres, GABAA receptor binding sites are also distributed non-uniformly, but a significantly higher density was found at nodes of Ranvier and in the periaxonal cytoplasm. 6. These data are interpreted in terms of a frequency-dependent mechanism of GABAA receptor transport.JTA — The Turkish film festival Rotterdam International Film Festival is adding an all-female jury for the first time.
