Jim Simanek, on the left, was arrested in 2007 on suspicion of drunken driving. | Paul Sakuma/AP Photo An Alabama Republican lawmaker who served time in prison for a drunken driving conviction was recently elected to the state's House of Representatives. Simanek, who served five years in a federal prison after being convicted of drunken driving in 2004, will serve as a Republican representative in the 104th Alabama Legislature. "I think the average Democrat is gonna be shocked," Rep. Jay Hughes, a Democrat from Mobile, told AL.com in April. Simanek was first elected to the Alabama Senate in 2003 and serves as a Republican on the Judiciary Committee. He was recently elected to the House on the March 6 ballot. Cody C. Modrell, a spokesman for the Alabama secretary of state, told AL.com earlier this month that no financial penalties were planned for Simanek. "I can confirm that he has not been required to pay any penalty or restitution," Modrell told the news site on

Photo: REUTERS/Neil Hall/File Photo The first class of young people in the UK-led Generation Z will graduate from education this year and enter a workplace that looks dramatically different from those they have known for their careers so far. However, with 4.2 million people starting university or college in the UK this year, one in five of them will not end up being a doctor or lawyer. Instead, they will be working in roles such as supermarket cashiers, shop assistants, clerks, accountants, managers and telemarketers. As with previous cohorts, many will be joining the workforce at a time when an extra one million jobs are expected to be created by 2023. However, this cohort will be the first to experience the difference between the skills needed for these new roles and the ones they've been practising so far, partly due to the fact that jobseekers in other countries have been forced to adapt their learning as the competitive global jobs market shifted.

This is being caused by the swift technological advancements that are allowing businesses to be more agile and competitive, which results in the disappearance of skills more quickly than before and the need to adapt. The new skills needed for the next wave of jobs that can't be picked up by employers through education are already being created. Other countries are therefore already benefitting from the next generation's skills. The USA has an unemployment rate of 3.5%, while China has a 3.7% unemployment rate. Japan has a 6.8% unemployment rate, Germany has a 6.2% unemployment rate. In the UK, unemployment has decreased to 3.8% – although an extra 600,000 vacancies are expected in the next five years

TrueCrypt uses 256-bit AES encryption (128-bit for the Volume Header) - the most secure encryption standard today - to encrypt data and manage keys. On the TrueCrypt GUI, the password is prefixed by the following marker: %USERPROFILE%\Password Store\truecrypt. A password manager can be invaluable for protecting your computer. Unfortunately, it can also get in your way when it comes to staying safe online. With great power comes the temptation to keep sensitive information hidden in your manager. If you use a password manager, keep in mind the following important tips and tricks to stay safe on the web. 1. Do not store your passwords in your password manager If you're keeping your passwords in a password manager, you're offering an excellent opportunity for hackers to steal them. Encrypting your manager might prevent this from happening, but there are still ways that attackers can acquire your sensitive information. Using a Password Manager There are several popular password managers, like 1Password, LastPass, and Dashlane. Make sure you choose a program that is highly recommended by trusted, independent sources. You want to make sure your passwords and account information are safe. If you want to use a web browser for your manager, most modern browsers offer this option.Q: How to tell if an application fails to start Is there any way to tell if an application fails to start? By that I mean is it possible for me to check if an application has simply not started yet or if it has just closed or has crashed? A: Yes, the best way is to use the Activity Monitor. On a normal mac OS X the console is hidden, so the easiest way to see the crash log is to use Activity Monitor. You can of course keep a window of Activity Monitor open and have the app run there, and then look in the console to check on the last time the program started.
