As already discussed in our last blog, HYPER-motion data was captured in a pretty innovative way. In addition to the really high resolution data that was captured, the more important aspect is that this data comes from real players performing in really real conditions and with an extremely high intensity. This is a game engine; this is the engine that is in the game, and that is also what makes the game so beautiful and effective. It is basically the key moment at the start of this blog. HYPERMOTION TECHNOLOGY Traditional video game technology involves taking the player's movements (speed, acceleration, movements) captured via motion capture cameras or laser scanners, and then converting these movements into animations and control algorithms that are then applied to the player's avatar. In a typical video game, the avatar can only move in 4 directions, up, down, left, right. It cannot move in the forward or backward direction (at least it doesn't work that way in FIFA) because the game needs to account for the player's movement. The only way it can work is to apply judgements that require only one direction: left/right. It is impossible for the game to know exactly where a player is moving to. Any movement that is not recognised by the game, is not recreated in the animation, and this is mostly invisible to the player. This is what is known as FOG (Fog of War) and it can be seen in real time, in all sports games we play, even in football. And FOG doesn't just occur in public (like it usually does in Fifa 22 Cracked Accounts) but instead it happens in private moments too - it can be an inside forward who is just about to do a cross or a back post defender playing a one-two with the striker just in front of the goal. Generally, the lower the intensity, the less visible FOG is. However, when the player intensifies, the FOG increases in intensity. What has been done to counter this, is to add extra animations to the player in those cases when he has a clear advantage. However, sometimes you can get close to the real player who is wearing a motion capture suit. This means that, for example, the player can hit the opponent at maximum intensity, giving away no information whatsoever, and at the same time, they are giving away

Features Key:

- FIFA 22 is the first console game in the series to feature a new chip technology that lets players move and pass the ball more accurately and quickly.
- The new "FluidDynamics" engine makes passing and tackling easier by improving ball control thanks to a new transfer kinematics model.
- FIFA Ultimate Team introduces new team kits, stickers, and player items with dynamic, legendary player abilities.
- Career Mode sees "PAYDAY 2" co-creator Jake Goldberg take the reigns and delivers a career for players of all levels, complete with the Pro system and competitions.
- "Pro Clubs" introduces a competitive career featuring three tiers, seamlessly-linked single-player and online matches and rewarding monthly rewards.
- Player Progression brings a more player-driven experience to the series, with players' BRI's, ELO and rating evolving with their performances.
- "Be A Pro" adds the ability to play as yourself in Player Progression based challenge matches
- "Real Team Feel" brings all-new AI behaviours derived from years of studying real-life player styles, including the introduction of a new "WALK ON" animation that lets the player take control of the ball.
