Prevalence and risk factors for hepatitis A virus infection among the children in Banda Aceh, Indonesia. To evaluate the prevalence and risk factors for hepatitis A virus (HAV) infection among children in Banda Aceh. Children (age 1-14 years) were examined for the presence of anti-HAV IgG antibodies in June 2003. Socio-demographic and behavioral information and data on recent illness (July 2002 to May 2003) were obtained. Of the 965 enrolled subjects, the prevalence of anti-HAV was 21.1% (95% confidence interval: 18.1-24.1) with no significant difference ( $P>0.05$ ) by gender. The predominant age groups were 1-3 years (34.1%) and 4-5 years (31.6%). The rate of infection was significantly ( $P<0.05$ ) likely to be infected than older children. The prevalence of HAV was also higher among children from the residences close to the rivers (36.7%) compared to those who lived in the older residences (24.6%). Since children from the river areas were more likely to have a recent history of diarrhea, the most important risk factor for HAV infection was diarrhea in this group of children. A randomized controlled study of the efficacy and safety of two different one-layer suturing techniques used during breast-conserving surgery. The
