Q: Existence and uniqueness of a class of solution to implicit equation Let $f: \mathbb{R}^2 \rightarrow \mathbb{R}$ be a continuously differentiable function and $f(x, y) = y - x^3$ implies $f(x, y) = -3xy + x^3$ and $f(x, f(x, y)) = 0$, then the existence and uniqueness of a class of solution to $fx = f(x, y)$ is given by (i) $\exists!$ (ii) $\exists!$ (iii) $\exists!$ (iv) $\exists!$ (v) None of the above I want to know what is the correct solution to this question, but I am not sure whether the above is even correct. The definitions for class of solution I am using are: For $Q \subseteq \mathbb{R}^2$, a class of solution exists if there exists a point $(x_0, y_0) \in Q$ such that $f(x_0, y_0) = y_0 - x_0^3$. If a class of solution exists, then there must be a unique such point. For (i), (ii) etc., we have such point for $(x_0, y_0) = (0, 0)$. e79ca774b

A. Category: Architecture stubs Q: How to get the receiver's location from SMS? I want to send an SMS that contains a LocationID. Is it possible to get the user's location when the SMS with this LocationID arrives? A: You can not get the location when your SMS has a specific Location ID. Your app will have to store the specific location that the phone has, and will have to be responsive to the SMS. There is no way to access the actual location. The user could possibly choose to not send it back with the SMS and when a phone call comes in if he has the app installed, it could allow the user to respond to the phone call. See the following documentation: Annual Holiday Fund: Here's how you can help I know the holidays can be hard for many of you who work with our families. Between the extra hours needed to pull off all the holiday "tasks," the amount of stress that can be involved and, of course, the ever-present need to provide for your family, I understand. You can help by donating to our Annual Holiday Fund. Thanks to your wonderful support, we have been able to provide thousands of thanksgivings and Christmas for our children and youth over the past few years. Please help us keep this important work going
