Preface This chapter provides a brief overview of AutoCAD and AutoCAD LT. AutoCAD LT is a new release of AutoCAD, but for most users it is more or less similar to AutoCAD LT 2009. For more detailed information on AutoCAD LT 2009, refer to the AutoCAD LT 2009 installation and use manual, which you can download from the ADM Download Center. Automated drafting is done in the drafting window. The drawing area can be set to display a two-dimensional (2D) wireframe, 2D solid, or 3D solid model. For each type of drawing model, you can select a view. The default view is orthographic, which shows the drawing from above. You can also choose one of a variety of different projective views. A drawing may include windows that can be fitted to a particular view. The drawing area is where the 3D drawing models are created. You can use the direct drawing tool, Dynamic Graphics Pipeline, to create the models. You can also create models by using an existing drawing file. You can change the drawing model by choosing a new view. View Options In AutoCAD, the default view is not often the best view for your work. Different views make a drawing easier to work with. The display is divided into four areas: Front View This is the default view. The drawing area is positioned at the bottom of the display and is always visible. The Front View view option includes a preview window, similar to a slide show. The drawing area is not subdivided into windows. You can change the default view by choosing a new view. Side View The Side View view option lets you choose from three different views. The drawing area is divided into two windows. Axes View The Axes View view option includes an X-Y view. It includes a polar coordinate grid. Top View The Top View view option includes an orthographic view. The drawing area is subdivided into windows. Creating and Saving Drafts Drafts are temporary files that store the commands and data that you enter or change in AutoCAD. They are usually

The purpose of this retrospective study was to evaluate and compare the long-term results of apicoectomies, postectomies and endodontic treatment of furcation perforations and lesions of the interproximal areas. In this retrospective study, we reviewed the pre- and post-treatment data of furcation perforations and interproximal lesions treated with either apicoectomies, postectomies, or endodontic treatment. For each patient, the following clinical and radiographic parameters were evaluated: the presence of pain, a positive percussion test, bone defect, furcation perforation, tooth mobility, tooth vitality and/or radiolucency, adjacent teeth and furcation involvement. Perforations were observed in 19 of the 56 roots in which apicoectomies were performed and in 3 of the 14 roots in which postectomies were performed.
