Applied anthropology is the application of. A survey of the world as a whole, particularly in a field such as medical anthropology, does not. The total death toll of more than 50,000 reportedly killed in the past week alone in the war in Yemen so far, has been claimed by the military coalition fighting the country's Houthi rebels. "The coalition and its allies killed more than 100,000 insurgents and destroyed more than 200 Iranian-made weapons systems and munitions in the past seven days," a senior commander of the coalition fighting the Iran-backed Houthis told a Saudi broadcaster on Friday. Khaled al-Mouahad, who claimed to be in Saudi Arabia, said the coalition operations had targeted the areas of Sana'a, Sa'ada and Sa'ada province. According to military sources cited in the report by the Saudi-owned al-Arabiya TV, at least 30,000 Houthis were killed in the onslaught launched in support of exiled Yemeni President Abd Rabbuh Mansur Hadi. The sources said that the rebels suffered heavy losses as their positions were overrun by the coalition backed by the air raids of the United States and its allies. It remains unclear how many of the dead were combatants and civilians in the conflict that has raged since September 2014. In September last year, the United Nations said that the country was now the "world's worst humanitarian disaster" after a four-year war that has forced more than 5,000 women to undergo female genital mutilation. The conflict, which pitted a U.N.-recognised government backed by a Saudi-led Arab coalition against the rebels, has triggered one of the worst man-made humanitarian crises in the world. Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, both allies of the coalition, imposed a blockade on Yemen in March 2015 after the rebels seized the capital Sanaa, ousting the internationally recognised government of President Abd Rabu Mansur Hadi. The coalition has carried out thousands of air raids on Houthi positions in Yemen, and the rebels have fired hundreds of missiles on 6d1f23a050
