Only a third of students aged 16 to 24 are currently in work (the youth unemployment rate is 32.3% compared with 18.4% in 2001). By 2017, the youth unemployment rate will have dropped by nearly one-fifth (to 17.5%) but be lower than the 2001 rate (17.9%) even with the weak levels of employment. Since 2013, the youth unemployment rate has fallen by more than 0.5 percentage points in every European country bar the UK. The gender gap in youth unemployment rates has continued to widen across all

EU member states and will have grown by the end of 2017 compared with 2013. In 2012, the gender gap was already 2.5 percentage points, but by 2017 it will have increased to 3.2 percentage points (in the EU overall, the gap in youth unemployment rates will also increase, from 2.3 percentage points in 2012 to 3.4 percentage points in 2017). The share of young people with little or no qualifications has continued to increase (to about 14%). However, the share of those who have tertiary level qualifications has continued to grow and now stands at 65%. Although countries in the bloc have reduced their youth unemployment rates significantly over the past decade, some EU member states still have rates higher than the EU average. In 2017, Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden will have rates higher than the EU average. The EU average rate for 2017 will be 22.5%. The latest Youth Indicators, part of the Blue Book 2017, are based on Eurostat's Labour Force Surveys. The 2017 data include information on youth employment and education among other things, and are therefore more disaggregated. Recognition of non-identical proteins by anti-idiotypic antibodies. Anti-idiotypic antibodies are mainly produced as a consequence of immunization of mice with the specific anti-anti-idiotypic antibody. The non-responsiveness of naive animals is described.
