As some 2,000 residents live there, problems facing the buildings on East 14th Street are familiar. But it is the supply of affordable housing that has some concerned and putting pressure on the national housing reform movement. "I think there was, like, 6 or 7 managers that they fired, and then they are now closing in on the next office and they're gonna redo it for the new manager and they have a couple more vacancies," said homeowner Toosa White. The borough house where he lives is one of the housing assistance program was one of the folks let go. "On day the announcement was, like c6a93da74d
