Tetradrine or Stephacoside A. .1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a lubricating oil composition for a refrigerant compressor. More particularly, the invention relates to a refrigerant compressor lubricating oil composition containing an ester of alkylphenol and a fatty acid as an anti-oxidant. 2. Description of the Prior Art Refrigerant compressors comprise a compressor unit including a compression mechanism, an oil reservoir and a lubricating oil containing a refrigerant therein, and a lubricant supply means for supplying the lubricating oil to the compressor unit. In the compressor lubricating oil, a phenomenon of oxidation occurs which promotes rapid deterioration of the refrigerant compressors. In order to inhibit the oxidation of the lubricating oil, a stabilizing anti-oxidant has been added to the lubricating oil, and most common anti-oxidants have been phenolic anti-oxidants such as phenylmercaptan, the condensation products of phenol and formaldehyde, dialkyl gallates or the like. In addition to the phenolic anti-oxidant, there is a known hydrocarbon anti-oxidant such as pentaerythritol tetraethylhexanoate or pentaerythritol esters of higher alcohols. When an ester of an alcohol and an aliphatic acid is used as a stabilizing anti-oxidant, the acid moiety of the ester is dissociated by contact with moisture as in air at a high temperature and deposited as a salt on a surface of the metal for use as the compressor, thereby causing a problem of corrosion of the metal. When an ester of a phenolic anti-oxidant is used as the anti-oxidant, the ester may decrease the oxidation prevention effect of the phenolic anti-oxidant because of the esterification of the phenolic anti-oxidant as described above.
